

Interdisciplinarity

Beyond the Divide

Call for papers

Date: 26th and 27th of February 2015
Date: 26th and 27th of February 2015

‘Interdisciplinarity Beyond the Divide’ is meant to blurr the lines between different disciplines (linguistics, literature, civilization and Computer Sciences) and different languages. This conference will not only disseminate knowledge established by writing research, but it will also create a contact-zone among different approaches to writing. New perspectives will thus be highlighted.

In an era where borders are challenged, writing goes beyond the rigid categorizations of disciplines. Researchers need to strengthen multi-voicedness and promote writing across or even beyond the divide.

A myriad of key questions will be at the heart of the debates and discussions: What are the implications of research writing in the 21st century? Are there methodological differences between papers on literature/history and papers on linguistics and computer sciences? What are the implications of multidisciplinary for teaching? What bearing does the "blurring of lines" have on the notions of "mainstream," of the "canonical"? What are the implications of multidisciplinary for teaching staff recruitment, evaluation and promotion?

We invite abstracts of 300 words in English, French, Spanish, German or arabic for papers of 20 minutes length. Contributions to the conference may include but are not limited to the following topics:
